Maine Men in Service

by U. S. Sen, Ralph O. Brewster Ten thousand homes in Maine will turn their thoughts on Christmas Day to the four quarters of this hemisphere-from Iceland to Manila and from Fairbanks, Alaska, to Trinidad and Panamawhere Maine boys will observe their Christmas "on the alert." Next year 30,000 homes are likely to be involved. But in a bacader sense every one of the 200,000 homes in Maine must be alike concerned as these boys belong to us and are

Christmas Dinner

By Katherine Edelman

A S SOON as Darrel Thorpe got a chance to use the phone, he dialed his home. He must tell Edna, liew corry, how terribly sorry he was for what had happened this morning. All the way down on the car he had reproached himself for the hasty words he had said. He couldn't understand how he had spoken to Edna like that, and on Christnias eve.

He drummed impatiently on the desk as he waited. Edna was always punctual about answering the phone and doorbell. It was a way she had, going right through with Which really was the cause of his flash of temper this morning. In her quick, decisive way, she had swept aside his idea of having old Mrs. Darby for Christmas dinner. The little lady, now down on her luck, had befriended Darrel when he had come to the city.

"I'm not going to have her!" Edna

"You sent for me," he said stiffly, as he waited beside the desk. The ing man did not seem to hear him. His eyes were glued on a closely typed statement. Darrel spoke again. Then Daniel Wheatley looked up, and rubbed his hand across his forehead as if trying to remember something.

"Oh, yes, yes," he began; "Mrs. Thorpe called before you got to the office this morning. I forgot to tell amon Shouldtingvard, that, she was Darby, or some such name Also, he wanted me to be sure to tell you to bring home a Christmas tree and all the trimmings." There was a merry twinkle in Wheatley's usually hard eyes "Looks as if you were asing to celebrate Christmas at your house," he finished, with a laugh.

We certainly are." Darrel grained back; "we're going to have a real old fashioned celebration of

"Think your wife would object if you took a cranky old man to Christnas danner "

Darrel wundered if he were hearing things, then his nuick wit jumped to the surface. "If you really mean that, Mr Wheatley, I can nosure you of a hearty welcome. My wife thoroughly believes in having people for Christmas dinner At least, I am sure she does now" The last sentence Darrel whispered to himself

Ma nodded in understanding. Who could know better than she how a heart can wither and die in the dark 'gray walls of a city?

"We bought a farm through a friend of Mary's Dad." The man went on. "Maybe we were stung. It was in California, and we took it sight unseen. We had hard luck. It rained when it shouldn't, and some of our crop was beaten down. Then it didn't rain when it should've, and a lot of our stuff burned up."

"No water on your land?"

"Had been. But some big shot on the other side of the hill tied it up in court. Smoked us out. Wanted our little hunk of land to add to his. We were little people-and he wasn't. We didn't have money to fight him, and when he dammed up the headwaters of our creek we were through."

Ma growled sympathetically.

"We finally had to sell for almost nothing. Me and Mary went to Seattle and I got a job there. Just when we knew the Little Fella was coming, there was a strike. We lived on what we had and I worked when I could, but you know how things are. Easier to spend money than make it. When the time got close me and Mary decided we'd better get back to Chicago to her people. I hate charity, but it's better than starving. Mary thinks so, anyway,"

Ma bit her lip.

"So we started out in our car. It was a good car-once. It broke down outside that last village." "Mountain Creek!"

"We ought've had gone back then, guess, but we thought we saw a light and we kept on. After a while, Mary couldn't make it and I left her in the stable and started for help. I saw your candles. "No," he said, stubbornly, "it's thanks-and Merry Christmas!"

Christmas morning burst white and beautiful across the hills. Ma stood at the window and marveled at the gentle froth of snow clinging to the pine trees, the soft feathery snowbanks leaning gracefully against the porch.

Breakfast in the parlor was a merry meal, broken only by the occasional whimpering of the new baby. As the last crumb disappeared, the girl said diffidently, "Joe and I've been talking and we-"

Ma nodded in understanding, Who could know better than she how a heart can wither and die in the dark 'gray walls of a city?

"We bought a farm through a friend of Mary's Dad," The man went on. "Maybe we were stung. It was in California, and we took it sight unseen. We had hard luck. It rained when it shouldn't, and some of our crop was beaten down. Then it didn't rain when it should've, and a lot of our stuff burned up."

"No water on your land?"

"Had been. But some big shot on the other side of the hill tied it up in court. Smoked us out. Wanted our little hunk of land to add to his. We were little people-and he wasn't. We didn't have money to fight him, and when he dammed up the headwaters of our creek we were through."

Ma growled sympathetically,

"We finally had to sell for almost nothing. Me and Mary went to Seattle and I got a job there. Just when we knew the Little Fella was coming, there was a strike. We lived on what we had and I worked when I could, but you know how things are. Easier to spend money than make it. When the time got close me and Mary decided we'd better get back to Chicago to her people. I hate charity, but it's better than starving. Mary thinks so, anyway,"

Ma bit her lip.

"So we started out in our car. It was a good cat-once. It broke down outside that last village." "Mountain Creek!"

"We ought've had gone back then, guess, but we thought we saw a light and we kept on. After a while, Mary couldn't make it and I left her in the stable and started for help. I saw your candles. My mother was Irish. We always had lights in our windows on Christmas Eve, too, in case—in case people had no place to go."

"No," he said, stubbornly, "it's thanks-and Merry Christmas!"

Christmas morning burst white and beautiful across the hills. Ma stood at the window and marveled at the gentle froth of snow clinging to the pine trees, the soft feathery snowbanks leaning gracefully against the porch.

Breakfast in the parlor was a merry meal, broken only by the occasional whimpering of the new baby. As the last crumb disappeared, the girl said diffidently, "Joe and I've been talking and we-

Mary's smile was wistful. "If you'll be so kind as to put us up till we can move along-"

"Move along where?" Ma demanded.

"To Chicago. I can get a factory job in Chicago." Joe's smile was bleak.

"You'll stay where you are." Ma chipped off the words without ceremony, "and work for your board and keep till Spring. How can you move a baby in Winter, in a ramshackle car and with no money? I'm a lonely old woman and you can stay until Spring or-" Or until when, her invalid heart mocked.

Mary's eyes filled with tears. "You're kind," she murmured. At a loss for words. Ma merely snorted vehemently.

The girl went on, "We can't ever repay you." "Nobody expects any pay for do-

She left Joe and Mary to themselves, and wandered into the Big Doc's study,

Ma leaned back against the closed door and her lame old heart sang bravely as she addressed her husband's portrait. "Well, Kit," she said, "you've gone and got yourself a namesake, even if I did have to practically fish it out of a snowdrift."

She sat down at the scratched desk. "They're nice kids," she confided, "and they've had a rough deal. Funny, isn't it? Here's a house and farm and none of our own want it, and yet it would be a blessing to those poor waifs out there, Doesn't Mabel and Patsy O'Brien. seem right, does it?" The picture eyed her calmly.

"It doesn't, does it?" Ma was startled at her own passionate in Christmas and a Happy New Year tensity. "Would it matter much to to all. you, Kit, to have strangers living here? I mean, if they were nice strangers? And if they had a little boy named after you?

"Kenneth doesn't need the old place, Kit," she pleaded, "He'd only sell it. You'd hate that. So would I. And Lydia wouldn't live here on a bet. She loathes Mountain Creek.
